Description

PRN 42356

'JUICETRUMP HILL' IS AN UNNATURAL WEDGE-SHAPED MOUND DEVELOPED FROM THE SPINE OF A RIDGE. IT IS POSSIBLY AN EARTHEN LONG BARROW ALIGNED SSW-NNE. {1}, AREA 0.715H, LENGTH 110M, WIDTH 65M, HEIGHT 7M

Dilwyn Jones does not mention this site in his gazetteer of long barrows, so the identification of this mound as a long barrow is dubious.{2}

Description and Sources

Description

Cropmarks of prehistoric enclosures and boundaries, on land to the south of Furlongs Lane. Identified on aerial photographs examined as part of the National Mapping Programme. The features included a sub-rectangular, ditched enclosure with rounded corners, convex ends and possible internal features. It was thought possible that this feature may represent the remains of a former Neolithic long barrow. {1}{2}

The interpretation of the sub-rectangular, ditched enclosure as a long barrow has been rejected by Dilwyn Jones on the basis of further aerial photographic evidence. {3}

Description and Sources

Description

An ancient trackway called the Bluestone Heath Road runs from the neighbourhood of Burgh-le-Marsh at the edge of the sea plain to headwaters of the River Bain where its further course northward is undetermined. In the Middle Ages it was called Bushkow Strete. For some way in its middle course it is the boundary between the wapentakes of Louthesk and Gartree and it is probable that it joined up with Caistor High Street and so led through to the River Humber. {1}

On the east side of the Wolds the crest of the hills carried a prehistoric route. It starts near Ludford and follows the chalk ridges towards Burgh-le-Marsh. {2}

The Bluestone Heath Road is a wide ridgeway, much sunken in several places including parts of Calceby and Tetford parishes. Although it is believed to have been used by the Romans, it is thought to have prehistoric origins. {3}{4}

During a watching brief on a pipeline which crossed the Bluestone Heath Road, a section (at TF 26065 83040) across the road was recorded. The section revealed a buried topsoil beneath a layer of chalk rubble which formed the earliest metalling for the Bluestone Heath Road. The tipped chalk had a marked camber. It would appear that there is evidence for only one phase of road construction at this point before the introduction of tar-based metalling. This suggests that although the route is prehistoric, the road itself may not have been laid until much later. A backfilled ditch was also found to the west of the road, aligned parallel to the hedgeline beside the road. This adjacent ditch was potentially associated with the road. {5}{6}

Description and Sources

Description

Medieval settlement remains have been recorded as surviving as earthworks, in and around the present village of Belchford. {1}

A sherd of wheelthrown Saxon shell-tempered ware and eleven sherds of post-medieval to early modern pottery were found during a watching brief at Main Road (PRN 43884a - TF 2929 7539). {2}{3}

Three trial trenches were excavated in advance of proposed development of land adjacent to Narrow Lane, Belchford. Evidence of medieval occupation of the site was recorded in the form of a number of pits, a gully and a robbed wall trench. A range of medieval pottery types was recovered though the majority appeared to date to the 13th and 14th centuries (PRN 43884b - TF 2964 7529). {4}{5}

This could be a small blade industry site and possibly a camp site. In addition a knife, scrapers, a biface tool and a possible spear point of perhaps late palaeolithic date were also found. {1}

Description and Sources

Description

The site of a windmill marked on the 1888 and the 1905 Ordnance Survey maps. {1}{2}

A post mill was moved to Belchford in 1828, or a little before, from Fulletby the adjacent village to the south (see PRN49118). It had two pairs of stones, one pair French and other grey stones. It is referenced as for sale in the Lincoln, Rutland and Stamford Mercury in April 1845 and to let in March 1850.

A four-sailed tower mill in Belchford was dismantled and felled by Thompson's of Alford in about 1923 having stood derelict for a few years. It was a four storied brick tower with an ogee cap. It had been overhauled in 1910. This is the mill marked on the Ordnance Survey maps and the post mill was probably on the same site. This source provides a list of known millers. {3}

Description

A late 18th century timber-framed barn with later timber cladding. The majority of the wall and cross frame timbers of the timber framing appear to have survived. It has a pantile roof and brick gable ends. In the interior the central tie beam has an inscription 'HAW' and a date that is probably '1775'. The barn is of five bays and appears to have been used at some time as a threshing barn, the main double doors being in the middle bay on the north-east side of the building. Each bay has a simple but largely complete cross frame comprising a principal tie beam fixed to the wall plate probably by a lap-dovetail joint with bracing between the wall plate and main post and between the main post and tie beam. The bay of the main double doors appears slightly wider and there is no bracing impeding access through these doors whereas there is bracing on the opposite side suggesting that on the west side the barn either had no door or a smaller door. The more southerly main post from which the left-hand main door is hung has snapped and is probably only restrained by the bracing to the back to the principal tie beam. One infill panel on the west side in the bay south of the door bay has split laths similar to mud and stud laths but there is no mud. The cross frame at the northern end of the barn is missing. The simple vertically boarded external timber cladding is later than the timber frame. A number of the roof timbers appear to be of a similar age to the cross and wall frames. The barn is currently (2016) used for storage. {1}
